

Can you transfer American Airlines tickets to another person?

No, American Airlines tickets are generally non-transferable, meaning you cannot officially transfer a ticket to another person. The name on the ticket must match the ID of the traveler at check-in. If you want someone else to fly, you usually need to cancel your ticket (if allowed) and purchase a new one in their name. However, there may be exceptions or special cases, so it's best to check directly with American Airlines for your specific situation.

Does American allow you to transfer a ticket?

American Airlines does not allow you to transfer a ticket to another person. Tickets are issued in the name of the traveler and must match their identification at check-in. If you want someone else to use your ticket, you typically need to cancel your booking (if the fare rules allow) and have the other person book a new ticket in their own name. Transfers between passengers are generally not permitted.

Are American tickets non-transferable?

Yes, American Airlines tickets are generally non-transferable. This means the name on the ticket must match the traveler's ID, and you cannot change the ticket to another person's name. If someone else needs to fly, they must have their own ticket booked in their name.

Can you transfer plane tickets to another person in American Airlines?

No, you cannot transfer plane tickets to another person on American Airlines. All tickets are non-transferable, meaning the name on the ticket must match the traveler's ID. If someone else needs to fly, you would need to cancel the original ticket (if allowed by the fare rules) and purchase a new one in their name.